Popular Education.

"And, behold, it was known unto me by experience that every empire, which is not established in morality and religion nor strengthened by regulations and laws, from that empire all order, grandeur, and power shall pass away."

These are the words of a conqueror who occupied the thrones of twenty-seven kings, and of a statesman whose law governed more than a hundred millions of people, under a dynasty which he established, nearly four hundred years.

Since the age of Tamerlane observation and experience have continued to show that morality is the essential basis of good government, and that no permanent institution can exist without it as an ingredient.

No government worthy of the name will be without the means of preventing as well as punishing crime. The latter, indeed, is a means to secure the former; and could some other method be adopted which would more effectually cause mankind to desist from the perpetration of crime, it would be abandoned. The practice of virtue flowing from habits of morality can be secured by inculcating morality in the minds of the young only, and the government which fails to do this, has omitted the chiefest method of promoting the general welfare of, and of securing the blessing of liberty to its people.

Ignorance is the fruitful parent of vice. No government except a despotism can secure order in a State where there is not a diffusion of knowledge; and that autocracy must have absolute command of a large military force and revenue.

In a Democracy, the restraint put up on the passions of men must arise from mental discipline; which, in its turn, is the result only of early training and education. Whenever the ultimate and sovereign power is lodged in the hands of the people, say for the perpetuity of the government and for having wholesome laws, that ignorance is not tolerated. Education is a duty which every government owes to its citizens, and is a right which every person has to demand of his government. Illiteracy and all the evils which are produced by it, are the shame of the government in which they exist; and in our Republic the ignorance of our fellow-citizens is the reproach of all who have received culture more than of those who have not.

A Word to the Farmers.

Confidence is the basis of credit, and credit is the life of trade. In the condition in which our Southern people are in—working out of losses incurred by an unsuccessful war—credit is absolutely essential to us. To the producers it is perhaps more necessary than any other class. Notwithstanding the advice with which our farmers are overwhelmed, they will plant cotton and buy provisions; and they will continue to do so until they are out of debt, and perhaps afterwards. Cotton and turpentine cannot be made without food, and this food has already been had, but not paid for. The muscles of men and mules which made the standing cotton of the South, were mainly vitalized by the grocers of the country. Those grocers must see that the contracts which they have made with the planters are completely carried out before others can be made. It is not a matter of choice with the merchants, but of necessity. Their credit must be sustained, or they will not be able to have the provisions for the farmer to feed his hands with next year. This is a case in which honesty is not only the best but the only policy which the farmers can have, for a departure from it will involve ruinous consequences both to themselves and to the grocers whose provisions have been eaten by the labor which made the crops.

A dispatch from Salt Lake City says the public session of the Mormon Conference, and the private meeting of the priesthood, terminated Wednesday, and the separating missionaries were blessed on Thursday. Brigham Young's health is declining; he only spoke twice, and distinguished himself by his hostility to free schools. He announced emphatically that he would oppose legislation in favor of free schools, and use all his influence everywhere against them. Thirty-two elders were called on missions. Joseph F. Smith goes to Europe.

TENA THE PROPHETESS.
Scenes from the Sanctuary—Singing and Shouting—Music and Mud—Neatness and Filth—Religion and Fanaticism—Where are our Missionaries?

About a mile above Brown Marsh, (a station on the Carolina Central Railway, about forty miles from this city,) and about two hundred yards to the left of the Railroad track, can be seen the "SANCTUARY OF TENA."

Just here we think it would not be out of place to give as much of a description of this strange being's history as our inquiries could elicit: Tena, the "God," is a negress apparently about fifty years of age, with a head of perfectly white hair. There is nothing about her person or features, with the exception of her hair, that would particularly strike one, and she does not differ from most colored persons in appearance. Tena, we learn, was originally from Wilmington, and a member of the Front Street Methodist Church of this city, while under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Mr. Bobbitt. She was very demonstrative and noisy during services in the church, and very often would run out and climb up a tree in front of the edifice, and there make the most horrible noise imaginable. Finally, on account of her noisy manner, and repeatedly annoying the congregation, she was excommunicated, and thus closed her connection with the Methodists.

We failed to learn of her whereabouts from that time until the Fall of 1863, when she located at Brown Marsh, where she has resided ever since. Upon her arrival there, she immediately commenced to establish a "Church" of her own among the colored people, but did not succeed very well until the close of the war, when she pushed her work with renewed vigor, until she has now about sixty persons in her band.

The "Prophetess" declares herself "God," and asserts that she can foresee and foretell any and everything that is to be, and makes her band worship and respect her as such.

THE SANCTUARY
Is a rude log cabin, containing one room, built in the commonest way imaginable, and in very many places the clay which is used to stop the space between the logs has fallen out, and by that means only can a circulation of air be obtained, as there are no windows in the room. Nearing the "Sanctuary" in front, from the railroad track, the first thing that strikes the eye of an observer is a couple of rough posts set high, and, about eight feet apart, each with man's shirt hanging on it; the shirts are made of common unbleached homespun. On entering the enclosure, one would be struck with the cleanliness of the yard; not a stick or even a pine straw is allowed to remain in the yard, as it would be considered an ill omen if perchance it should remain in the enclosure a half hour unobserved. Immediately in front of the gate, and about half-way between the fence and the "Sanctuary," is a small pen about twelve feet square, and in the middle of the pen is a block, the seat of the "God." This pen is termed by them the

SINGING HOUSE.

Here they all huddle up together, and dance and sing something that would remind one of an Indian war song.—Proceeding around the left corner of the "Sanctuary," the next thing to observe will be a peculiarly shaped clay-hole, about nineteen feet long, and two and a half feet deep, half-full of muddy clay water. Our searching inquiries failed to elicit the technical name for the clay hole. In this clay-hole, each one of the band goes, makes a clay ball about two inches in diameter, and places it on the edge of the bank to dry and become hard. Following our guide around the house to the back door, we noticed four poles placed in the ground, forming a square, about three feet from the door. On each one of these poles there is a covering for the head, two bonnets and two hats. Around these poles the band dances on certain days, (supposed to be holy days of the band.) "Tena the God" has two seats of honor during prayers, one in the fire-place and the other in the bed. She invariably sits in Turke during the services, and her followers kneel prostrate on the floor.—They are known throughout the country as the

TENA BAND.

They have their Day of Atonement, and on this occasion the "God" offers up herself as a sacrifice for the sins of her followers. During this portion of the ceremonies for the day, she sits in the fire-place and throws ashes over herself; then walks over, stepping on every one of her followers, who are lying on the ground, face down, to "wash out their sins."

Gov. Caldwell issued a pardon to Andrew Skinner, an old colored convict in the Penitentiary convicted of manslaughter at the Spring term of Wayne county Superior Court in 1869, and sentenced to ten years in the Penitentiary.

On Wednesday, of last week says the Battleboro Advance Emerson Vick, a young man about 16 years old, near Joyner, met a horrible death, by being thrown from his horse and dragged nearly a mile by the runaway horse, his foot having caught in the stirrup.

the "God" a small basket of provisions. Any who fail to comply with the requirements are punished. The "God" is very profane, and is held in fear and trembling by the colored people of the neighborhood, though, however, they do not fear that she will hurt them by doing them an injury by physical strength, but by "conjuring, putting mouth on them, or guffering them." This band has been in operation for the past eight years, and by its earnings succeeded in building a shed in which to "worship." The authorities refused to let them use the shed for that purpose some twelve or eighteen months ago, on account of the bad effect it had on the colored people, who were dispensed to credit Tena's assertions.

EDITORIAL BUDGET.

Eight persons on Court street, Boston, have been arrested for circulating obscene literature. Nearly all figure as doctors, and travel under aliases. They were committed in default of bail.

At a meeting of the Workingmen's Council in New York, the Secretary was instructed to communicate with Mr. Arch, now in Canada, and ascertain whether he intends to be the guest of the upper classes or of the working people.

The International Judicial Congress opened at Brussels, October 11. Miles, of the United States, made a speech on the origin of national arbitration. David Dudley Field, of New York was present.

A dinner was given last night to the members by the town council.

Four members of the Directing Committee of the Dight, in the French Assembly, have left for Brussels to meet the Count de Chambord, who will arrive in that city at the same time they do.

A Memphis dispatch says no idea can be formed of the deplorable state of affairs there. People die faster than they can be buried. Hundreds have died unattended. Bodies have laid uncared for until partially decomposed, and at one burial place the stench arising from the coffins awaiting interment is horrible. Nine hundred persons have perished from the fever since its first appearance, and it still rages. There is a lack of competent nurses. Some physicians have given up in despair at the frightful carnage and fled the city, though the majority remain and are laboring day and night in the cause of humanity. Money is urgently asked for.

A letter dated Pueblo, Col., October 5, says: On September 28 a party of some three hundred Indians, consisting of Cheyennes, Arapahoes, and Kiowas, came into Arkansas valley from the South and camped opposite Fort Lyon, near Las Animas. The commanding officer at Fort Lyon had a talk with the chiefs, but could learn nothing of the intentions of the Indians. They claimed the country as their own, and said they proposed to roam over it as they pleased. They were all warriors, armed with breech loading Government rifles, one or two good revolvers each, and bows, spears, &c., and each had an extra led horse. The commandant at Fort Lyon requested the Indians to return to their reservation, to which they replied that they would go when they got ready, and talked very impudently.

Two days afterward they left, and proceeding up the Arkansas river, through the settlements, divided into small parties along the various tributary streams, and began an indiscriminate slaughter and stampeding of cattle compelling the herders to cook for them. This continued about a week, during which time several hundred head of cattle were killed, and excitement and consternation were created among the settlers, a large number of whom flocked into Pueblo and other towns. At last accounts the Indians were going toward the settlements on the Las Animas river, below Trinidad, and the citizens were arming for defense. Several small companies have already gone out to defend the settlements. Two or three herders, who attempted to defend their herds, are reported to have been killed. The Indians came from a reservation near Fort Sill. Military aid has been asked for, but none had been received up to the date of the letter.

Gov. Caldwell issued a pardon to Andrew Skinner, an old colored convict in the Penitentiary convicted of manslaughter at the Spring term of Wayne county Superior Court in 1869, and sentenced to ten years in the Penitentiary.

On Wednesday, of last week says the Battleboro Advance Emerson Vick, a young man about 16 years old, near Joyner, met a horrible death, by being thrown from his horse and dragged nearly a mile by the runaway horse, his foot having caught in the stirrup.

The President of the State Agricultural Society has appointed a special committee to take charge of the newspaper men visiting Raleigh during the Fair there this week. The News says editors and reporters visiting the Exposition will please report to the office of the Secretary in the Fisher Building on Fayetteville street, and the Committee will take pleasure in assisting their visiting brethren in securing accommodations while in the city.

The Raleigh News says: Governor Caldwell has declined the invitation to attend the Agricultural, Stock and Mineral Exhibition which is to be held in the town of Asheville on the 5th of next month. The declination of the Governor is based upon public business which will engross his attention just previous to the meeting of the Legislature.
